

English Language Development

Site Schools vs. Non-Site Schools

English language development (ELD) site schools offer intensive support to students while learning grade-level curriculum along with peers. Students receive a range of 100-300 support minutes a week from a certificated ELD instructor to focus on the development of the English language, enhancement of core content, and academic language. Site schools ensure that qualifying students receive the most support possible during the week. All students who qualify for language support have the opportunity to attend their designated site school.

Non-site schools are provided with an ELD teacher who visits 1-2 days a week and provides 30-60 minutes of support to help build upon academic skills.
